

Critical literacy and critical interculturality: where do they meet?

Considering the fact that literacy and interculturality are key concepts in education, this presentation will focus on what both concepts mean from a critical perspective. To do so, some basic theoretical elements will be addressed: literacies, interculturality, multiculturalism, intercultural education. I will also argue that critical literacy and critical interculturality need to be seen as local and social constructions. Finally, a reflection is developed in regards to future areas of research for foreign language pre-service and in-service teachers.
